

friends since first grade, Sydney and Megan are equals in all ways but one: When it comes to decibels, Megan's instrument trumps Sydney's.

"I don't like the music we play in class that much because I can't hear myself," said Sydney. "It's the CD and Megan. They drown me out."

Along with classmate Nick—who learned the rudiments of his saxophone over the summer—Megan and Sydney established themselves as the tone-setters (so to speak) of the seventh period.

RULE NO. 3

The third rule of sixth-grade boot camp stipulates that students must learn to assemble, disassemble and properly store the instrument in its carrying case before they blow a single note.

With Dorries preoccupied with Shaunice and her flute, Sydney stepped into the breach.

Turning to fellow clarinetist Kaelan, she reviewed the rudiments of clarinet assembly and disassembly she'd learned just weeks before.

"Mr. Dorries was helping Shaunice," she explained later. "And (Kaelan) was doing it wrong. I was afraid that Mr. Dorries would yell at him, so I helped out."

"Besides," she added with a smile, "I was bored."

Not for long.

BIG NEWS

In the first week of this month, Dorries cleared his throat and waited for the din to die down.

The acerbic band director smiled broadly, clearly reflecting his pleasure at the announcement: "We've decided to let the Beginning Band butcher the holiday concert."

"Jingle Bells," he added, "will be the piece sacrificed on the altar of music."

Dorries paused. There was more news. Three students in the class, he continued, would not be joining the beginning band.

The class shifted nervously, wondering who would be excluded and why.

"Sydney Everett, congratulations. Megan Ratchiff, congratulations. Nick Wiegand, congratulations," Dorries said. "I'm about to hand you three pieces of music. You'll continue to work from the red book in class here. These three other pieces are from the blue book. The three of you are in Intermediate Band."

The first thing Sydney noticed when she glanced at the music—"Jingle Bell Rock," "Joyeux Noel" and "Tequila"—were the chords.

Dorries picked up on her hesitation. "I'm going to warn you, there are some notes in there you haven't learned yet," he said.

Sydney studied the music. "Can we write on the music?" she asked.

Dorries looked at her. In 6 weeks, he knew, Sydney would take her seat on a stage before friends, family, teachers and classmates. She would lift a mouthpiece between her teeth and play an instrument which, when the semester began, she knew existed but hardly understood.

"You surely can," Dorries told his student. "Just make sure you use pencil."

TRIBUTE TO KAYLEE MARIE RADZYMSKI

HON. ZACH WAMP

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 14, 2007

Mr. WAMP. Madam Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge an outstanding young lady from the Third Congressional District of Tennessee, Kaylee Marie Radzynski, of Cleveland, Tennessee. Kaylee is an incredibly special young lady with great ambitions and a strong sense of pride in her country and her military.

Kaylee joined the United States Naval Sea Cadet Corp in December 2002 and has befriended many of our men and women in uniform as she has traveled to our military bases and met with our soldiers first hand. In talking with some soldiers who had just returned from Iraq, she learned that among the things they missed while away from home was entertainment. So when Kaylee was 14 years old, she started an organization known today as Tunes 4 the Troops which consists of her collecting compact discs and DVDs and sending them to our soldiers who are defending our country.

As of last week, Kaylee has sent over 25,000 CDs and DVDs with a value of over $375,000.00. Kaylee has raised over $19,000 in cash, goods, and services. The Tennessee Titans NFL team sent her $4,000 and Outback Steak House provided her with 300 free meals recently for a fundraiser where she raised over $5,000. The money pays for cases, printing, and shipping costs. So many others are pitching in now . . . a box manufacturer in Ohio donates all the boxes and tape; David Smith, owner of Dick's Graphics in Cleveland, Tennessee, does all the printing at cost; Cleveland News Now.net, a media group in Cleveland, has given Kaylee office space with all utilities and Internet access as well as a computer to use there for 2 years; Cleveland High School, her sponsor in this endeavor, has given Kaylee a checking account at school to facilitate the bookkeeping.

Kaylee has set up drop-off locations all over Bradley County including the Armed Forces Recruiting Offices, Award Realty, Bradley County Courthouse, Circuit Court Clerk's Office, Cleveland City Mayor Tom Rowland's Office, Cleveland High School, Dick's Graphics, Bradley County Justice Center, and Southern Heritage Bank. As of this March, Kaylee has set up 27 other locations across the country to collect more CDs and DVDs for Tunes 4 the Troops with over 20 more boxes scheduled for delivery in combat zones this month.

Madam Speaker, 15-year-old Kaylee Radzynski understands that she is the future of America and that she can look forward to her future because of the sacrifices made for her and all Americans. I'm so proud to represent Kaylee who is using her voice to say "thank you" to all those serving in the Armed Forces of the United States of America!

SUPPORT FOR 2007 SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

HON. NANCY E. BOYDA

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, March 14, 2007

Mrs. BOYDA of Kansas. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of the upcoming 2007 fiscal year supplemental appropriations bill.

Much of the debate on this bill has focused, quite rightly, on the provisions that codify President Bush's benchmarks for Iraq into law. This is an important subject that I plan to discuss in depth later this week.

But today I wish to spotlight another element of this legislation, one that offers renewed hope and opportunity to millions of children in Kansas and throughout the United States: the extension of the State Children's Health Insurance Program, or SCHIP.

If you are fortunate enough to have health coverage, you might not realize what peace of mind insurance brings. You don't worry that your child will wake up with an ear infection that will cost a month's rent. You need not fear that the price of a broken leg will force you to default on your auto loan, or that the injuries from a car crash will obliterate a year's salary.

But for many Americans, these fears are a fact of daily life. Forty-seven million of our fellow citizens—47 million of our brothers and sisters and our sons and daughters, 47 million of our coworkers and colleagues and our friends and neighbors—47 million of us lack health insurance.

Worst of all, among those 47 million uninsured Americans are nine million children.

This is not just an economic or an institutional challenge. It is the moral crisis of our age.

The Federal Government has addressed this simmering emergency through two primary means. The first is decades-old and well-known: Medicaid. Medicaid is a good and vital program, but its scope is very limited. In some states, if your family earns one dollar less than the poverty line, you will receive full Medicaid coverage—but if you earn just a few dollars more, you're ineligible for any assistance whatsoever.

A sane health care policy must recognize that families earning 125% or 150% or even 200% of the poverty line need a helping hand. And that's where the State Children's Health Insurance Program, or SCHIP, enters the scene. SCHIP introduces badly needed flexibility into the Federal health care system. In short, it tells the states, "If you want to expand the eligibility of low-income children and families for government-sponsored health insurance, we'll offer matching funds to help you do it."

In the decade since its inception, SCHIP has proven itself an outstanding success. It has enrolled six million beneficiaries, dramatically reducing the number of uninsured children in our nation.

Later in this legislative session, Congress will consider extending SCHIP beyond 2007, and you'd better believe I'll fight every step of the way for its renewal. But for now our task is simpler. Due to poor planning and inadequate funding from the do-nothing 109th Congress, 14 states are running out of money to finance SCHIP through the current fiscal
